Revision of IORP directive threatens PE

THE EU IS proposing changes to the directive on Institutions for Occupational Retirement Provision (IORP) that would impose Solvency II-like capital requirements on funds of occupational retirement schemes. As pension funds represent more than one third of the private equity and venture capital investor base (including funds-of-funds), the proposal has led to an outcry from the industry.

"In the past four years, more than €50bn of private equity and venture capital investments came from pension funds," says EVCA chairman Karsten Langer.

While insurance companies are mostly ROI-driven, the Solvency requirements provide a degree of security for consumers – even if these may be considered too strict and detrimental to their previous investment strategies. Pension funds on the other hand, and more specifically IORPs, which are contingent on the terms of employment, make long-term investments motivated by minimising financial impact on the employer.

"Liabilities of pension funds are extremely easy to predict reliably," says Langer, which is why the security argument of the Solvency provision does not hold in the case of pension funds. "This change [in the IORP directive] could have a very damaging effect on these institutions' ability to meet pension obligations and have a negative impact on economic growth," Langer continues.

This impact on growth relates to the diminished force of private equity investments to support SMEs in the event of losing pension funds as an investor group. As with other regulations that decrease the amount of money invested in alternative assets, the industry fears that up to 36% of funds raised could disappear due to the policy change.

EVCA reports that the sale of banks' private equity portfolios at a market discount has led to a value erosion of up to €4bn in recent years. The drastic policy change for pension funds could easily surpass that amount considering their position in the industry.

EIOPA has called for a reaction from parties concerned by the issue and will submit its final advice to the European Commission on 15 February 2012. Following a quantitative impact study – the importance of which many industry players stressed in their consultations – a revised IORP Directive could be adopted in 2013/14.

Scottish Equity Partners closes fourth fund on £,200m

SCOTTISH EQUITY PARTNERS has announced the final close of SEP IV on £200m. The fund was unveiled in September 2011, when it had already raised £185m from existing investors, before meeting its target by the end of 2011. Carry, hurdle and management fees correspond to industry standards.

SEP's previous fund, SEP III, closed on £160m in 2006. Previous investors accounted for 80% of the equity in the latest vehicle. Half of the limited partners are UK-based, while the other half are from continental Europe and the US.

Pension funds accounted for 60% of the investor base. Other investors include funds-of-funds, family offices and corporate investors.

SEP will invest between £2-20m in growth-focused technology and technology-related companies in the UK. The fund will provide £5-20m for growth capital investments and £2m-10m for venture capital investments.

Calum Peterson worked on the fund on behalf of Scottish Equity Partners. The fund will be managed by SEP's 25 staff in London and Glasgow. Macfarlanes acted as legal adviser in the fundraising.

Tale of two funds

■ It was the best of times; it was the worst of times. As unquote" was going to press, Blackstone was close to announcing a final close on a behemoth $16bn fund. That same day, mid-market fund-of-funds specialist Access Capital Partners closed its latest vehicle on €500m, nearly 50% above its target. A week earlier, SEP announced it had raised £200m for its fourth vehicle. Blackstone will impress with its size, while Access and SEP do so for their swift raises. Blackstone took nearly four years to raise a vehicle smaller than its predecessor, while little ol' SEP raised a quarter more than its previous fund and in months, rather than years.

The fact that one of the world's most respected buyout titans would take so long to raise less than its previous fund shows how much the industry has changed in a few years. Of course, it would have been unreasonable for Blackstone to try and top its previous $21.7bn vehicle in today's economic backdrop, so the latest vehicle should signify prudence rather than failure.

Access has tweaked its strategy, with its latest vehicle expected to focus around 40% of its efforts on secondaries, up from just 28% in its predecessor vehicle.

SEP, on the other hand, is a relatively little-known brand, and one of Europe's precious few successful venture capital outfits. The very different experiences of these GPs could be a harbinger of things to come this year, as some big brands take more time than expected to raise, while some smaller, lesser known outfits attract LPs in record times.

Well done to these three funds for raising impressive sums. Their successes should not convey a false sense of hope, since these vehicles were raised in the most difficult conditions the market has seen. For every fund close we hear about, there will be countless others that spend unprecedented resource toiling away at their own vehicles. What is certain is that 2012 will see a record number of fund managers in the market raising; what is less certain is how many will reach a close.

Yours sincerely,

Leverage in 2012: liquidity still a concern

Graham Olive, head of acquisition & strategic finance for Northern Europe at Natixis, examines the likely difficulties during the next 12 months in securing sufficient leverage for buyout transactions

The latter months of 2011 have been characterised by diminishing liquidity and a great deal of volatility in financial markets, and it is these two interplaying factors that will perform the most significant role in shaping the year to come.

two months - a trait exacerbated by the tendency of the secondary debt and bond markets to track the equity market, creating a vulnerability to the movements of wider financial markets. As a result, a number of buyout deals have been postponed in the approach to year-end.

Shrinking liquidity

The leveraged buyout (LBO) market has a history of prospering in times of crisis - taking advantage of the more competitive pricing of target companies and reduced competition from trade buyers. And, without the need for complicated structuring, this can produce strong investment returns.

But transactions are structured and sold down into a market heavily reliant on liquidity and, as the wider economic crisis persists and liquidity further evaporates, activity will undoubtedly continue to be affected into the New Year.

Not only are banks shrinking their balance sheets but collateralised loan obligations (CLOs), a key source of funds, are coming to the end of their reinvestment periods, placing a further squeeze on liquidity. That said, different credit vehicles are now beginning to target the gaps left by banks and CLOs, and are likely to be a feature of the coming year.

Ongoing volatility

Contracting liquidity will also contribute to a continuation of the high levels of volatility experienced during the past

Certainly, volatility in the severely dislocated bond market has necessitated the use of alternative capital structuring, as seen in the use of mezzanine debt in several large transactions this year despite current perceptions that it is a relatively expensive form of financing. Vendor loans could also make a return.

In the absence of a nearterm solution to the ongoing European sovereign debt crisis, such volatility – and alternative capital structures – will certainly continue into the first quarter, and most likely the first half, of next year.

Shifting priorities

This combination of low liquidity and high volatility means buyout candidates will need to demonstrate to private equity sponsors a long track record of successful business in their respective sectors, as well as the ability to provide ancillary opportunities. And in a market where the practical advantages of strong professional associations have long been recognised, good relationships with general partners will continue to be essential.

Also important, and increasingly so, are defensible business models and first-class management teams. Merely maintaining a strong position in the home market will no longer suffice and buyout targets will be expected to have clear strategies for transitioning their businesses towards emerging markets.

It is also likely that the recent trend for investors in LBO bonds to push for greater protection – primarily in the form of first lien collateral, voting rights or improved access to information – will continue. This mirrors the leveraged loan asset class that has continued to perform well despite the crisis.

During previous crises, the buyout market has tended to retreat towards traditionally more resilient sectors such as food, healthcare, telecommunications and utilities. Although this will remain the case, investors are likely to be wary of increasing risk factors such as rising commodity prices, higher technology risk and reductions in government spending. Certainly, the spectre of government cuts has already negatively affected market perception of the defence sector – a sector which had previously displayed steady long-term growth.

Upcoming Opportunities

Despite current market conditions, however, banks remain open for business and refinancing opportunities will certainly arise as transactions conceived during the market's peak, prior to the Lehman crisis, start to reach debt maturity.

Furthermore, increasing economic pressures in some sectors will induce corporate groups to spin off subsidiaries as they seek to deleverage. And many sponsors will be keen to source new funds, raising the prospect of a reasonable secondary buyout deal flow in the year to come.

There is reason, therefore, to greet the New Year with a measure of optimism, despite the shortage of liquidity and ongoing volatility that is likely to mark the early months.

Falling listed fund valuations hint at secondaries boom in 2012

Listed private equity funds are suffering from lower valuations in 2011. This is likely to have broader implications for investors in private equity funds looking to divest, and the secondary specialists hungry for deals.

Diana Petrowicz investigates

Listed private equity vehicles have been bit by the renewed economic turmoil spreading from the Eurozone, with shares trading well below NAV. Pantheon, which runs the listed PIP vehicle, says its shares currently sell at around a 40% discount and this a trend being mirrored across the industry.

Andrew Lebus, partner at Pantheon, says: "Investors still think of private equity as a risky form of investment. Given the tendency of investors to assume a uniform level of risk, there is obviously good scope for investors to pick up exposure to trusts at a high discount as risk is lower in a highly diversified fund that has a good long term track record."

Aside from economic turbulence, new regulations could be pushing institutional investors to offload their private equity holdings, resulting in lower prices. Movements in the pricing of listed assets could provide some insight into the future of listed funds as well, and how they might fare on the secondatries market. As Banks and Insurance funds seek to firesale their private equity assets, secondary players are set to benefit from greater choice.

Secondaries activity certainly seems to be on the up, only this year Axa Partners acquired a €620m portfolio of LP interests from HSH Nordbank. This was quickly followed by a $1.7bn portfolio from Citgroup as well as $714m of assets from Barclays. This follows on from the record $20bn of secondary transactions seen last year, and secondaries investors have filled their funds ready for new investments. In July, Lexington partners closed its latest secondaries fund on $7bn and French secondary specialist Committed Advisors closed its maiden fund at €257m.

Elly Livingstone from Pantheon reckons that "About €100bn of private equity assets are still sitting on European banks balance sheets". These assets might come on the market in the near future, further increasing the choice available to secondary funds.

A glut of portfolios on the secondaries market will likely lead to low pricing and allow buyers to be more discerning in their decisions. Additionally, moves in Europe to regulate pension funds in a similar way as solvency II impacts insurance companies might put further pressure on the market. If and how long the secondaries market will benefit from these opportunities remains to be seen. However, it looks like many portfolios will change hands in the coming year.

UK & France level on deal values as year ends

The UK and France look set to end the year neck-and-neck on deal value, while Germany has seen a major push in the venture space. With 2011 drawing to a close, how do Europe's regions stack up? John Bakie investigates

With a swathe of mega-buyouts this year, much has been made of France's buoyant buyout market in 2011. The French market has been frequently compared to Europe's traditional private equity capital, the UK, as it attracted interest from major global buyout houses such as Clayton Dubilier & Rice and Advent International.

Figures from unquote's own data show the UK & Ireland and France are level on total deal value for the year, with France edging ahead on €15.85bn compared to the UK's €15.7bn.

However, France is severely behind in deal volumes, back in third place after DACH and the UK & Ireland with just 168 deals across early-stage, expansion and buyouts. The UK & Ireland leads with 247 deals recorded, at the time of going to press.

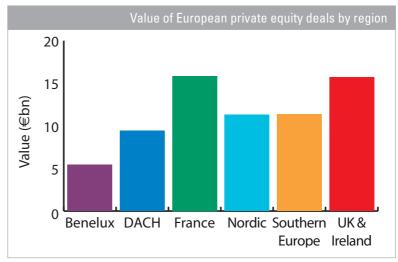

Surprisingly, the DACH region has slipped into fifth place in terms of deal value, recording just €9.4bn worth of investment. However, despite the relatively low value of investments, the region saw the second largest deal volume in Europe, with 213 deals.

This could be attributed to the relative strength of the venture sector in the region, particularly in Germany, which has seen significant activity, particularly in the technology and software sectors.

The Nordics and Southern Europe have kept pace with each other over the course of 2011. This might seem surprising considering the dire situation in the Eurozone, which has been particularly prevalent on countries in Southern Europe. However, a smattering of major deals by global players in both the Nordics and Southern Europe, coupled with continued activity in the lower and mid-market means total deal values for the two regions are separated by less than €100m. Southern Europe edges ahead in deal volume with 156 deals, compared to 146 in the Nordics.

The past year has brought a number of surprises. Not only in the sudden reversal of Europe's economic fortunes, but also in the way capital is being distributed. While the UK still leads it is no longer streets ahead of other parts of Europe for private equity investment. Equally, France may be finally opening up to the Anglo-Saxon model, enabling major global investors to take part in some of its major industries.

Fourth quarter 2011 – a game of three thirds!

In its regular quarterly commentary on UK private equity investment activity, Corbett Keeling gives a practitioner's view of trends in the number, value and financing of private equity deals. It finds a stark contrast between an apparently thriving smaller buyouts sector, faltering larger deals and an almost moribund market for development capital.

The really striking feature of the last quarter is the rise and rise of smaller buyouts (those of less than €150m). This is the sort of observation you might have expected in 2006 or 2007 but, no, here we are in 2012 reviewing the last quarter of 2011!

If all is well for smaller buyouts, the picture is radically different both for their larger cousins and for early-stage or development capital deals. You might say it looks like a game of three thirds rather than two halves – making it like ice hockey, which for obscure reasons takes place in thirds. But let's look at the historic statistics.

- At the end of the third quarter of 2011, we reported an "uplifting" story for smaller UK buyouts (of less than €150m enterprise value). That has continued up to the end of the year. With 105 smaller management buyouts at a total value of €4bn, 2011 is ahead of 2010, which was itself ahead of 2009. And, whilst activity was not at the heady (most would say overheated) levels of 1999 and 2007, it compares well with 2001-2003; on the current trend, it would quickly return to 2004-2006 levels. So things look quite rosy for the UK private equity practitioners who occupy this space surely an unexpected result, given the prevailing economic gloom.
- The story for larger UK buyouts (€150m or above) is not so heartening. The pick-up of 2010 has been reversed. Both volumes and values are down, at 24 deals for a total of €11bn for the year, producing a gloomy at best stuttering trend, for the participants of this section of the market.

The picture is similar for UK early-stage and expansion capital deals. The result for 2011 fell to a lower level, both in terms of volume (140 deals) and value (€1.2bn), than any of the preceding 12 years. As ever, there is of course scope for more 2011 deals to be reported and recorded after we write, but the outlook for early-stage and expansion deals, as for larger buyouts, still seems bleak.

Let's see what unquote"s survey of market practitioners was predicting some weeks before the historic statistics were available. Were the survey results consistent with what the facts indicate?

- The balance of views on the market for smaller deals is broadly optimistic: three times as many respondents suggest activity will rise as think it will fall. The picture for larger deals is almost the reverse, with roughly twice as many respondents reckoning deal activity will fall (given the current trend, that means fall further) than think it will rise. So, in both respects, the market view seems to be in tune with the facts.
- The survey goes on to look at leverage. Respondents' views are split fairly evenly between those who think there is enough debt available and those who think there isn't. Interestingly, the proportion of deals entirely funded by equity has taken a significant upturn, from 17% to 27%, suggesting that private equity executives are losing patience with any perceived or real lack of bank debt and so are just getting on with deals. Certainly, we are finding that in order for an equity funder to be taken seriously in the current market, it is almost a prerequisite that they say they would, if necessary, be prepared to fund proposed transactions 100% themselves.
- Almost half of respondents view values as having stabilised. This might reflect cost-cutting, which is expected to continue through reducing staffing levels, or it may simply demonstrate the operational strength of underlying businesses: as the head of one fund recently commented, 60% of its portfolio companies continue to trade ahead of the prior year.

Perhaps the most telling survey question, though, is the final one, even though it is not private equity specific. The overwhelming response to the question "Do you believe that Europe's leaders are doing enough to restore some investor confidence in the eurozone?" is "No". This is the feature of the current environment that could throw all historic trends and predictions off track – though one must also remember that turmoil and adversity always create opportunity for nimble operators.

In the meantime, despite anything you might read in the news, all is not doom and gloom for deal-makers. Indeed, considering that a large proportion of UK private equity deal-makers – whether principals, investors or advisers – are involved in deals of less than €150m, you could just as easily conclude that the outlook for 2012 is bright! ■

Amadeus Capital Partners, Van den Ende & Deitmers and the Business Growth Fund (BGF) have invested $25m in UK-based social media business Unruly.

This is the company's first round of institutional funding. The three investors will together hold a minority stake in the business. The fresh capital will be used to strengthen Unruly's position on the European market, expand its US presence and establish a footprint in Asia.

Amadeus stated it was attracted by Unruly's proprietary technology and aggressive global growth strategy. Meanwhile Van den Ende & Deitmers highlighted favourable growth prospects for the online video ad market.

Company

Founded in 2006, Unruly distributes sponsored video content for media agencies and brands through a network of more than 10,000 publisher websites, platforms such as YouTube, Facebook and Twitter, blogs, and mobile applications.

The London-based business is profitable and posted a $25m revenue in 2011.

Richard Anton led the deal for Amadeus. Van den Ende & Deitmers and the BGF were represented by Martijn Hamann and Marion Bernard respectively. All three investors will join Unruly's board of directors.

Transaction

LDC has sold its majority shareholding in golfing retailer American Golf to Sun European Partners. The deal value was confirmed to be between £50-60m.

The investment will support further expansion of American Golf's market presence and matches Sun European Partners' experience in the retail sector.

The private equity firm currently counts a number of European retail companies operating on and offline among its portfolio and was drawn to American Golf's strong management and growth potential.

Debt

The transaction was all-equity funded.

Previous funding

In 2004, LDC backed the MBO of American Golf, acquiring a majority interest for an undisclosed amount with the intention of expanding its retail store network. RBS provided debt to support the transaction.

Company

American Golf is an online and in-store retailer of golf equipment and accessories. Under LDC's management, its store network has grown from 50 to 88 stores across the UK and Northern Ireland.

Last year, the company completed the acquisition of SW Golf Limited, operator of online golfing retailer onlinegolf.co.uk, which has increased online sales to 15% of revenues.

Last year, sales increased by 20% to £86.6m and have continued to improve over the current financial year. Profits have increased by 250% since 2010 with sales to overseas markets accounting for 30% of online revenue.
